Passie voor Muziek (Passion for Music)

Interview with Touraj Moghaddam

"The brand Roksan is one of the most British trademarks: being self-willed and having its own strong identity.

Owner and principal designer, Touraj Moghaddam, is one of the most enthusiastic and likeable audio-people, whom I have been lucky to have met during the last few years.

He has an unprecedented passion to realise his ideas, and besides he is very communicatively skilful.

Because of a good worldwide sales Roksan prospers.

Therefore earnings are increasing and the development budget is getting larger all the time so that more devices can be developed, which need research and money.

Touraj Moghaddam is a clear forefront developer in a sector where copying appears to have become the foremost virtue.

Such a forefront function is never easy, but thanks to people of his kind and their unlimited motivations and perseverance, we are - as fanatical music-lovers in a small minority of the population - able to reach our ultimate aim: reproduction of reality in the family circle at home".

Dit laat je nooit meer los (This will never let you go!)

Conclusion:

"Without comment the penultimate line of my preceding paragraph applies to this set, which means an absolute summit, and within this summit being very special as well because of the excellent ease and the splendid timbre. My own record player is equally expensive, but doesn't reach this level of timbre. I am very curious to know what other competitors like TWA or the latest Linn Sondek have to say about this. I will do my utmost for all of you. But everyone who really loves music and still doesn't believe in the made-up fairy-tale that has been called CD, has to listen to this combination set. Or you do not of course, because after having heard the sound you will never let go of it".

The highly popular TV series, Inspector Morse, was first aired in 1987. The series revolved around a brilliant detective (Chief Inspector Morse) also an avid music lover and somewhat of an audiophile who enjoyed classical music played on his cherished world class record player.

In the first full length episode (The Dead of Jericho) Morse was put in charge of a murder investigation that lead him to the very people behind the design of his much loved record player.

Roksan had launched its first record player Xerxes in 1985. Almost immediately it became the reference record player with many audiophiles. Granada TV contacted Roksan in 1986 to provide them with this ground breaking and world leading record player to feature in the Inspector Morse TV series. The Xerxes record player continued to feature throughout the series.

Inspector Morse episodes have been watched and enjoyed by millions in more than 80 countries. Thanks to John Thaw, one of the most popular and beloved actors in British Television history who sadly passed away in 2002, Inspector Morse has become a 'cult' series.
